About ORIGAMI, Los Angeles, CA

Danny Resnic, a native of Boston, founded his public benefits company, ORIGAMI Healthcare Products, Inc., in Los Angeles, CA, to commercialize the next generation of condoms designed around pleasure and supported with real world safety data. Building upon earlier clinical research and development supported by the National Institutes of Health, the inventor continues his long-term commitment to launch his condom revolution with a new brand of condom innovations. Resnic studied design at the renowned Art Center College of Design in CA.

Resnic was infected with HIV in 1993, following an experience when a condom he used broke. That life changing milestone forged his commitment to understand how rolled condoms could have survived in the market unchanged and unchallenged for nearly 100 years.

Resnic observed that the old rolled condom had not made an significant design innovation since it was first industrialized in 1920. As a result, he developed a new, engineered approach that could provide a wide range of structural design options that were previously never considered. Resnic holds several international patents, has served as the Principal Investigator for four NIH-funded clinical trials to develop and commercialize the ORIGAMI condoms, and continues to innovate the condom industry.

On June 3, 2014, Resnic was awarded the $100,000. Bill & Melinda Gates GCE Award to develop a 'Next Generation Condom'. The company plans a product launch by the end of 2015.
